Miss Lone.

Not go to town, this Spring, Papa!

Mamma! not go to town!

Inever knew you so unkind,

You chill me with that frown—

My sweet Mamma, indulge your pet,

Notices! Papa to go—

Entreat Papa to go...
Ah now I see you're weeping too,
We shall succeed I know. We shall succeed I know.

MRS. Love

Alas! my child, I've done my best,
And argued all day long;
But men are always obstinate,
Especially when wrong:
'Tis for my girl I urge the trip,
Not for myself, alas!
But when I married had I known—
No matter—let that pass!

Ma. Love.

No matter—let that pass:

Ma. Lowe.

My dear you know that I abhor
These silly discontents;
Tou're quite absurd; why don't you make
The people pay their rents!
I ca'nt afford to take a house—
Nay, don't put on that sneer;
For once be happy where you are,
We'll go to town next year.

Miss. Lowe.

Miss Lone. Next year, Papa! next year, Mamma You know I'm thirty-two,

You know I'm thirty-two,
((call myself but twenty-six,
So this is entre nous,)
Next year I shall be thirty-three—
I've not a day to lose,
Oh, let us go to town at once,
I'm lost if you refuse,
MRS LORE.
Your conduct, Sir, is most absurd,
We went last year in June,
But Fanny had not a fair chance,
You took us home so soon;
Sir Charles was evidently struck,
I'm sure he wou'd have popp'd,
But then he saw no more of us,
And so the matter dropt.

MR. Lore.

Ma. Lovo.

For sixteen springs to town she went,
When town began to fill,
And sixteen summers she return'd,
A firring spinster still!
And now the times are very bad,
And departs in stream. And tenants in arrear, Dear love! I really can't afford To go to town this year.

Mas. Lose. Dear love, indeed! I ask you Sir. Dear love, indeed! I ask you Sir.
Has any one man got
One single sixpence he can spare?
I answer, he has not.
Yet in Haut ton arrivals, still
I see each neighbour's name;
If other paupers go to town,
Why can't we do the same.

Miss Long.
Does not the Opera contain Its customary squeeze?

Have not the groven of Kensington
Gay groups beneath the trees?

At Almack's, happy radiant eyes
Outshifte the chandeliers;
And when I think of legs Hyde Park,
—I can't restrain my fears.

Mss. Lone. Of course, my dear! you stay with us?

Why, no, my love! not so, y duties Parliamentary
Force me, alas! to go. Mas. Lone. You can't afford a house in town!

Mn. Lone.
No, sweetest! there's the rub;
But I shall sleep at Bat's you know,
And dine, love! at the Glub. Mas. Lose.
The Club! I hate that edious word, The bane of wedded life,
Oh! well the roving husband fares,
But chone man and husband fares, And then the thing's a vile excuse,
Which we must take perforce:
"Where have you been this afternoon?"
Oh—at—the Club"—of course.

I hate them all! but I abhor I hate them all! but I abhor
The Athanium most;
They ask the ladies Wednesday nights?
— Tis all a braggart boast.
To show the guilt and or moles
Each eager member strives,
And seems to say "snug quarters these—
What can we want with wives?"

Mas. Lone. Come, desrest Panny! dry your eyes, A lectle rouge, put on,
1'll order you as wert cluspeau
From Maradon Carson.
The flaces and the Archeries
Will very soon be here;
Cheer up, my lovef you shan't be vex'd,
We'll go to town next year.

The Torch was lying at anchor in Binefields Hay. It was between eight and nine in the morning. The land wind had died away, and the sea-breeze had not set in—there was not a breath stirring. The pennant from the mast head fell singuishly down, and clung amongst the rigoing like a dead snake, whilst the folds of the St. George's ensign that hung from the mizen-peak, were as motionless as if they had been caved in marble.
